

Welcome to The Blanco Dog Kennel!

Before I moved to Alaska to mush in the Iditarod, I lived in Texas on the Blanco River. I took care of dogs, and I had three favorite dogs. They were huskies, and that is what inspired me to look more into the Iditarod. The huskies were so strong and competitive but they were also cuddly and calm. That is when I moved to Fairbanks, Alaska to start training for the Iditarod. Dogs help me learn and seeing them in the Iditarod is so amazing because the dogs started learning commands when they were puppies. If I was hooked up to a sled I would be scared because I would not know what to do, but the dogs, they are so tough and perfect for the Iditarod. Because of that, I have mushed for six years. I named my kennel Blanco for the white snow on the Iditarod trail, and the dog picture came from the inspiring animals that all humans need, and the red lantern came from my first race, when I got the red lantern.

You can come to The Blanco Dog Kennel to meet the dogs, and see what it is like on the trail! Thank You!
