

N is for

Nome

Nome is home to the finish line of the Iditarod. The town is located on the Seward Peninsula. Nome was once a booming gold mining town of over 30,000 gold seekers, but the current population is down to only about 3,600 people. Now, each March between 50-70 mushers reach the "Burled Arch" on Front Street and complete the "Last Great Race on Earth". The last musher to reach Nome receives the Red Lantern Award.
